Units are tested to be working in full operational mode before release. Technicians are available to monitor the units during lease as well.

Flatpack Containers

Flatpack containers are specifically manufactured for use as accommodation or office units. These units have been hugely successful in construction sites, as labour accommodation, supervisor offices and military personnel in conflict zones. Flatpack containers use the same skeletal structure as marine containers, but without the steel sheets. Instead composite panels are used as the walls of the units. Flatpacks have now become a suitable alternative to traditional containers due to a number of reasons, mainly being:

- Ease of erection - a single unit can be erected within hours
- Flexibility – A number of units can join together to give a wide range of layout options
- Transportation – Since these units come with a knock down structure, 4 units can be mounted on a single trailer or a single 20' container, thus reducing transportation costs by up to 75% per unit.

Diesel Generators

Companies in engineering, manufacturing, oil & gas, construction, and mining contribute heavily to the economy of any given country. They therefore need to operate without fail even when power failure occurs. Diesel generators help keep these businesses going when electricity fails or when working on projects in remote areas where there are no power connections.

Without these generators, projects that require heavy machinery to run would stall every time there is a power problem. This could significantly increase the costs of carrying out the project or in some cases even lead to its eventual discontinuation. There is no industry that does not use vital power applications. Without proper diesel generators, this equipment could be ruined by power failures, power surges and such other startling events.
